Summaries of the parallel round tables

A. Round table 1: forests and economic development

1. Round table 1 was co-chaired by the Minister of Lands and Natural Resources of Ghana, Alhaji Inusah Fuseini, and the Deputy State Secretary of the Ministry of Agriculture of Latvia, Arvids Ozols.

2. The keynote speaker, Uma Lele, set the stage for the discussion on forests and economic development. She noted some overall positive trends, including a reduction in the rate of deforestation in many countries, increases in forest cover and trees outside forests and greater use of payments for ecosystem services.

3. She also noted that those achievements were largely made by countries themselves through national and local actions. Forests closely interacted with other sectors, including agriculture, water, energy and transport. She pointed out that there was a critical need for more comprehensive data on forest resources that could facilitate implementation of sustainable forest management policies and for financing for sustainable forest management.

4. Representatives of the following States contributed to the discussion: Argentina, Ireland (on behalf of the European Union), Belarus, Canada, Grenada, Israel, Malaysia, India, Finland, the Sudan, Iran (Islamic Republic of), Lesotho, Uganda, Jamaica and Turkey.

5. The following key points emerged:

(a) Forests, trees outside forests and sustainable forest management are essential for economic development, in supporting a green economy and livelihoods and in meeting the basic needs of forest-dependent populations and communities;

(b) Forests and trees provide direct and indirect benefits at all levels and contribute to alleviating poverty, improving food security and providing energy;

(c) Countries are taking a wide variety of actions to achieve sustainable forest management and realize the full potential of forests to contribute to sustainable development and livelihoods.

6. It was noted that countries also faced significant challenges, including:

(a) Lack of data on the non-cash and non-timber values of forests, including non-wood forest products, which are important to forest-dependent populations and serve as income for rural communities;

(b) Failure to capture the full value of forests in national accounting systems and their contribution to national economies;

(c) Significant pressure on forests from other sectors, including agriculture, energy and transportation, and lack of cross-sectoral coordination to address the competing demands;

(d) Dependence on fuelwood by rural and urban populations;

(e) Impact on forests of climate change, extreme climatic events and natural disasters;

(f) Impact on the forest sector of the downturn in the world economy.

7. Speakers noted a number of ways in which those challenges could be addressed, including:

(a) Better data and information on non-timber and non-cash forest values and benefits, including ecosystem services and forest-related jobs;

(b) Greater private-sector investment in forests and sustainable forest management;

(c) Technology innovation and research and development and, in particular, rural development;

(d) Diversification and innovation of forest products and diversification of domestic and international markets for those products;

(e) Increased financial, technical and scientific cooperation, capacity-building and information sharing at the regional and international levels, including South-South cooperation;

(f) Improved governance and cross-sectoral coordination at all levels.

B. Round table 2: outcome of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, the post-2015 United Nations development agenda and the international arrangement on forests

8. The second round table was devoted to interactive discussions on the interconnections of the eleventh session of the Forum, in 2015, with the international arrangement on forests, the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and the post-2015 United Nations development agenda. The round table was co-chaired by the Ambassador for the Environment of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of France, Jean-Pierre Thébault, and the Under-Secretary-General for Environment, Energy, Science and Technology of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Brazil, Luiz Alberto Figueiredo Machado. It was preceded by a keynote speech by the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs, in which he stimulated a rich and interactive discussion among participants and led countries and regional organizations to propose recommendations relating to the topic of the round table. A summary of key suggestions and issues raised during the round table is set out below.

1. Significance of forests

9. Forests provide multiple goods and services that are essential for people worldwide and crucial for sustainable development. Forests make significant contributions to addressing the complex and interconnected global challenges relating to economic and social development, poverty eradication, environmental sustainability, energy, water and mitigation of and adaptation to climate change. Forests are also vital for the livelihoods of local and indigenous peoples, providing a repository for a large portion of the world's terrestrial biodiversity.

2. Interconnections of the post-2015 United Nations development agenda, the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and the international arrangement on forests

10. The post-2015 United Nations development agenda, the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and the international arrangement on forests are closely interlinked. In the light of their significance for sustainable development, forests should be integrated into the post-2015 United Nations development agenda and the sustainable development goals and other relevant outcome of the Conference. The tenth session of the Forum is a timely opportunity to send a strong message to those processes to integrate forests into their work. To take maximum advantage of the opportunities provided within those processes for forests, and to make a sound decision on the multilateral forest policy agenda at the eleventh session of the Forum, various suggestions were made, including:

- (a) Setting a cross-cutting sustainable development goal focusing on sustainable agriculture, land, water and forests, taking into account the cross-sectoral aspects and multiple benefits of forests and their link to poverty eradication;
- (b) Setting a sustainable development goal on renewable natural resources;
- (c) Setting a sustainable development goal on forests;
- (d) Strengthening the current international arrangement on forests, including the non-legally binding instrument on all types of forests, not converting it to a legally binding instrument, in addition to strengthening the Forum and its secretariat, in order to address the gaps and the needs of countries;
- (e) Agreeing on a legally binding instrument on forests, which would be based on the current forest instrument;
- (f) Establishing a dedicated financing mechanism, such as a global forest fund, to provide complementary financing for countries and develop national capacity;
- (g) Establishing an ad hoc expert group to consider full options for the international arrangement on forests, taking into account the discussions in other two processes (follow-up on the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and the post-2015 United Nations development agenda), and requesting that group to make recommendations to the Forum at its eleventh session;
- (h) Holding other events, such as country-led initiatives, on the matter;
- (i) Strengthening existing regional and subregional partnerships.

3. Important considerations

11. In reviewing the interconnections of the post-2015 United Nations development agenda, the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and the international arrangement on forests, the following key aspects were emphasized:

- (a) Sovereign rights of countries over their natural resources;
- (b) The principle of common but differentiated responsibilities of countries;

(c) The need for additional financing, technology and capacity development for countries;

(d) The need to ensure coherence and coordination between the work of the Forum on the matter and other processes;

(e) The need to avoid prejudging the outcome of the follow-up work on the post-2015 United Nations development agenda and the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development;

(f) Consideration of the work of other forest-related conventions, such as the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change.

Annex III

Summary of the high-level interactive dialogue with the heads of the member organizations of the Collaborative Partnership on Forests

1. The Collaborative Partnership on Forests high-level dialogue with ministers was held on Tuesday, 9 April 2013. The following heads of the member organizations of the Collaborative Partnership took part in the dialogue: Centre for International Forestry Research, Convention on Biological Diversity, Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, Global Environment Facility, International Tropical Timber Organization, International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources, International Union of Forest Research Organizations, United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification, United Nations Environment Programme, World Agroforestry Centre and World Bank. The event was moderated by the Director of the Forum secretariat. The purpose of the dialogue was to provide the heads of the member organizations of the Collaborative Partnership with an opportunity to share their views on forests and economic development and forest financing; integration of forests with other sectors; and forests and the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development follow-up and the post-2015 development agenda.
2. The representative of the World Agroforestry Centre proposed three ways of addressing forests and economic development: addressing data gaps regarding forest goods and services, testing different payments for ecosystem services approaches and producing guides and manuals. The speaker noted the importance of identifying the most efficient and non-destructive ways of using forests and of conserving biodiversity, taking into account the integration of forests into other sectors.
3. The representative of the Global Environment Facility observed that there was no single solution to providing forest finance. Environment was one of the foundations for sustainable development. It was important to integrate all three pillars of sustainable development with trees at the centre. The speaker noted that donors were keen on seeing forests play a central part or role in integrating several sectors.
4. The representative of the International Union of Forest Research Organizations underlined the need for a holistic approach to forestry and agriculture development. The speaker identified various obstacles to the integration of forests and economic development. First, gross domestic product was not suited to capturing the full values of forests. While it measured flows of market goods, it did not consider stocks. Second, there was limited information on the contribution of forests. Some studies indicated that forests contributed as much as 25 per cent to rural household incomes, but most of that was not documented. Lastly, decision makers saw forests as a problem to be solved and not as a solution.
5. The representative of the International Tropical Timber Organization said that data on the role and contribution of non-timber forest products and forest services such as biodiversity and watershed services had not been captured, with the result that forestry was not seen as a competitive land use.
6. The representative of the United Nations Environment Programme indicated that the concept of the green economy, which it had been promoting for several years, had finally been accepted. The speaker said that there was a need to ensure that forests were at the centre of the green growth pathway and that REDD-plus (reducing emissions from deforestation and forest degradation in developing countries and the role of conservation, sustainable management of forests and enhancement of forest carbon stocks in developing countries) and the green economy should be mutually reinforcing.

7. The representative of the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources stressed the need to capture the services provided by forests and to integrate the data into national statistics.

8. The representative of the World Bank said that the Bank's forest-related work was focused on factors driving growth in forest cover and on mobilizing financing for forest management. There was a need to improve forest governance (tree tenure and addressing illegal logging) and to recognize the power of markets, such as in relation to how to use woodfuel markets to finance sustainable forest management.

9. The representative of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification underlined the role of dryland ecosystems and the need to articulate that role within the post-2015 development agenda.

10. The representative of the Convention on Biological Diversity echoed the need to follow up on the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development process and outcomes, given that the Convention had failed to meet the 2010 target of reducing biodiversity loss. That failure was partly due to focus on biodiversity in isolation. There was a need for an integrated approach, to mainstream biodiversity conservation and to address the drivers of loss of biodiversity and links with human well-being. Working in isolation failed to take advantage of ecosystems.

11. The representative of the Centre for International Forestry Research reiterated that many challenges were linked to isolation of the forest sector, saying that forests should be connected to livelihoods and governance and discussed in the context of natural resource development. The institutional challenge was how to engage with other sectors.

12. The representative of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations commented on the follow-up to United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and the post-2015 development agenda, saying that possible sustainable development goals provided an opportunity for an integrated approach to forests and development. Forests covered one third of the Earth's surface but their value was still not fully recognized. The multiple functions of forests made significant contributions to the green economy.

13. Following the panel discussion, the representative of Ireland, speaking on behalf of the European Union, emphasized the importance of the role that the Collaborative Partnership on Forests had played to date in highlighting the increased outputs of the Partnership in recent years. The speaker noted that the Partnership was an important component of the international arrangement on forests. The European Union welcomed the increased output of the Partnership, such as the increased reporting to the Forum by Member States. The Union called upon the Partnership to continue work on streamlining reporting on forests.

Annex IV

Summary of the multi-stakeholder dialogue between Member States, major groups and heads of the member organizations of the Collaborative Partnership on Forests

1. The multi-stakeholder dialogue was held on Wednesday, 10 April 2013. It was opened by the Chair of the Forum, Mario Ruales Carranza (Ecuador). An introductory presentation was given by the Director of the Forum secretariat, who noted that the Forum had a tradition of openness and transparency and aimed to ensure opportunities for all stakeholders to participate actively and present their perspectives on aspects of sustainable forest management policy and practices. She urged the Forum to consider approaches to strengthen the engagement and encourage the participation of all stakeholders, in particular forest-related organizations in business and industry and academic institutions and local authorities that were not actively engaged in the Forum process.

2. During the dialogue, which was moderated by Shashi Kant, Faculty of Forestry, University of Toronto, Canada, a combined overview position paper was presented by Peter deMarsh, Canadian Federation of Woodlot Owners and focal point for the farmers and small forest landowners major groups, on behalf of the major groups.

3. In his presentation, he noted that it was encouraging to see forestry issues being discussed in a cross-sectoral manner. That form of discussion was important to the major groups because their members looked at the multiple functions of forests in a multidimensional way, including the social, cultural and economic aspects. He said that, if sustainable forest management were to be achieved, the following were preconditions: recognition of the full contribution of forests; increased awareness of the importance of forests among urban populations; enforcement and protection of community rights; training and capacity-building; full market access for communities and smallholders; and the full participation of women and young people. All those preconditions required a robust process of engagement. He also stressed the need for Governments to abandon the idea of civil society organizations as enemies or adversaries who had to be out-manoeuvred and instead to view them as partners and vice versa. The main challenge to be addressed was financial support for the effective participation of civil society organizations in international forest dialogue processes. He called upon Governments to work effectively with civil society organizations at the national level.

4. Cécile Ndjebet, focal point for the women major group, observed that rural and indigenous women were not receiving due attention. She called upon Member States to address forest tenure issues to enable women to have secure access, to develop specific funding mechanisms to assist women to participate in small-scale forest enterprises and to focus on capacity-building for women's networks so as to improve access to information and high-quality participation.

5. Tolulope Daramola, focal point for the children and youth major group, noted that in many countries opportunities for forest management were limited. Young people and children were essential in the pursuit of green growth, however. He called upon the Forum secretariat to mainstream the youth agenda in Forum processes to ensure the development and implementation of a comprehensive and effective programme for children and young people. He urged Member States to promote intergenerational equity and transfer of knowledge by encouraging the participation of young people and to develop a global youth forest initiative to support the participation of young people in sustainable forest management.

6. Lambert Okrah, speaking on behalf of the non-governmental organizations major group, noted that discussions among participants at initiatives led by major groups that were held early in 2013 included a debate on governance systems and community-based enterprises.

7. Hubertus Samangun, focal point for the indigenous peoples major group, urged the Forum to take a rights-based approach. On forest financing targeting indigenous peoples, he urged the Forum to consider emulating the GEF Small Grants Programme. He also called for the establishment of a working group focused on traditional forest-related knowledge.

8. Paul Opanga, focal point for the forest workers and trade unions major group, stated that there was a need to strengthen human resources to manage forest resources sustainably and to contribute to socioeconomic development. He called for a thorough valuation of the contribution of the forest sector to national accounts, quantifying economic returns and potential for employment along the entire forest and wood supply chain, taking into consideration several subsectors, including non-wood forest products and environmental services. He also called for exploration of the possibility of stakeholders, especially companies involved in exploiting the resources, reinvesting in forest management activities through environment or green tax initiatives.

9. Sim Heok-Choh, focal point for the scientific and technological community major group, stated that science and technology were crucial in enhancing the contributions of forests to economic development by analysing the causes of and addressing threats to forests from human activities and natural disasters; determining forests' full range of goods and services and role in climate change mitigation and adaptation; documenting and adapting traditional knowledge for sustainable forest management and for conservation and sustainable utilization of forest genetic resources; and enhancing and facilitating access to and transfer of appropriate, environmentally sound and innovative technologies and corresponding know-how relevant to sustainable forest management and to efficient value-added processing of forest products for the benefit of local and indigenous communities. He said that there was a need to support international technical and scientific cooperation and to enhancing the roles of regional and subregional networks as brokers in securing financing; to strengthen information-sharing mechanisms, including regional databases, information clearing houses and directories; to facilitate efficient and effective cross-sectoral information flow between researchers, research institutions, policymakers and forestry practitioners and entrepreneurs; to strengthen forestry research, education and training to address issues relevant to global sustainability, including land use, livelihoods and environmental issues; and to facilitate the creation of an enabling environment for private-sector investment in science and technology.

10. Ghan Shyam Pandey, alternate focal point for the farmers and small forest landowners major group, urged the Forum to ensure secure land tenure rights for indigenous peoples, farmers and small forest landowners.

11. Andrei Laletin, focal point for the non-governmental organizations major group, noted that, after 17 years of forest policy dialogue, deforestation continued unabated, the many proposals for action notwithstanding, owing to a lack of political will, an increasing trend of overreliance on markets for solutions and ill-conceived concepts of forests, among other issues. He expressed concern that focus on REDD-plus (reducing emissions from deforestation and forest degradation in developing countries and the role of conservation, sustainable management of forests and enhancement of forest carbon stocks in developing countries) had potential negative effects for communities that might not be adequately covered by safeguards measures. He stressed the need to address underlying causes of deforestation, encourage private companies to reinvest in forest management and establish financial mechanisms accessible to smallholders and young people.

12. Jukka Halonen, speaking on behalf of the business and industry major group, called for the full participation of all major groups in international forums.

13. During the interactive discussion, participants stated that sustainable forest management could not be achieved without strong, continued and improved stakeholder dialogue. Stakeholder participation was essential at all levels. Policy could not be designed without the participation of those who would be most affected. At the same time, sustainable forest management could not be achieved without the engagement of all forest-related stakeholders.

14. In closing, the moderator stressed that, to be dynamic, the Forum process required the involvement of major groups. He stated that there was a need to preach and practice at the same time, as only then could there be an impact on forests.
